YALE AND DC PUBLIC SCHOOLS SUPPORTING K-12 TEACHERS

2025 Yale National Fellows from DC Public Schools

The Yale National Initiative supports the creation of Teachers Institutes in high-need school districts based on the model developed by the Yale-New Haven Teachers Institute since 1978.

Since 2015, teachers from the District of Columbia Public Schools have participated in the Yale National Initiative, which promotes the establishment of new Teachers Institutes based on a partnership between a high-need school district and a local college or university to improve teachers' content knowledge. Teachers Institutes offer collegial, content-based seminars in the humanities and STEM led by university faculty for public school teachers. Each teacher writes a curriculum unit on a subject related to their seminar topic using a university's resources. Faculty who serve as seminar leaders embrace the challenge of bringing their expertise to a new audience and report benefits to their scholarship and teaching.

Teachers...

- increase content knowledge
- create curricula for their students
- enhance sense of professionalism and enthusiasm for teaching
- receive a stipend upon completion

Faculty....

- support engaged teachers
- contribute to the community and its public schools
- communicate scholarship to a broader audience

Creating a Teachers Institute for DC

Since 2016, the Yale National Initiative to strengthen teaching in public schools® has worked with teachers, school officials, and university administrators to help build and grow the capacity for a Teachers Institute in DC. Teachers from DC serving as National Fellows participate in a seminar led by Yale faculty, including our two-week Intensive Session on campus.

Backed by rigorous evaluations over more than three decades, Teachers Institutes strengthen teaching, student engagement, and teacher retention. Of the 24 National Fellows from DC over the last ten years, 21 are presently employed by DCPS with 19 still teaching in the district. In addition, several DCPS officials and 8 faculty and administrators have participated in our programs at Yale. Three DCPS students have also presented at our Annual Conference at Yale.

“The Yale National Initiative is an amazing, collaborative opportunity to support teachers and improve education. Exchange between Howard University faculty and a national collection of faculty from participating universities, tribal nations, and public schools creates a valuable opportunity to build new professional relationships and envision and manifest something new.”

Attend our Program for Visiting Faculty at Yale

As part of our 2026 Intensive Session at Yale, the Program for Visiting Faculty runs from July 6 through July 9. It is designed for university faculty members in the humanities and STEM fields from communities that already have or are planning to establish a Teachers Institute. The Initiative provides travel to and from New Haven, lodging for five nights, and meals on the Yale campus.

Participants will observe two national seminars led by Yale faculty members and meet with the seminar leaders to discuss their observations. Participants learn about the Teachers Institute approach to curriculum and professional development and meet with the Fellows as a team to discuss their work locally and nationally.
